HONGKONO, THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1891. 11.30 A.M., after which hour they may | An increase of competition for the shipping trade of the Canton River is promised. The trade up to within recent date has practically been monopolised by a big Hongkong Company in co-operation with Mesers Butterfield & Swire. We have nothing to say against the manner in which the Company carries on its business. The great power it possessed was on the whole exercised with discretion; but monopolies, however wisely managed, are not beneficial

o trade. They always tend to check expansion. It is a popular idea that the riches of a country may, among other ways, be estimated by the dividends paid by its joint stock companies. It is very doubtful, however, whether big dividends are an unqualified sign of true commercial prosperity. After all, big dividends repre-11.30 a.m. and 3.30 p.m. sent heavy interest on invested capital, and Letters Nom Rowloon Point may be the tendency is for interest to decrease as prosperity, confidence and healthy competition increase. If therefore it should happer that the shareholders of the H. C. & M. Steamboat Company are unable, on account of competition, to continue paying dividends of 14 per cent., and are forced to be content with two-thirds or even a hall of that return, we are not sure that the result would be a los to the Colony. ·In fact we are rather inclined to think there would be a decided gain by the increase of trade between Can-Yau-I ton and Hongkong which the lower rates would produce. Of course the Company and its associates are not disposed to view the opposition from so philosophical watand-point. No private individual and no company can view with equanimity a is to atrive to crush the opposition which The Canadian Pacific as Laures of June 1 Goods per Moray undelivered after this causes the decrease. The following are some comments by

The Standard sage :- The marriage bond has naver before been interpreted, either hy lawyers or laymen, in the sense now lations between husband and wife reated on a natural basis, in conformity with the afforded her by the man to render him little services and solnces which she is specially qualified to afford. This is the understood compact by which marriage has been regulated in all civilised communities, and caprice or fickleness should not be allowed to override; it. It may be said of course that in her estimate of the duties imposed on her by marriage a woman is actuated rather by its religious than its legal aspects. and that though the 1 w might open the door for her, conscience would keep her from walking out. That it will not. however, restrain all women from doing so is patent; and what is wanted is a civil sanction, which shall be capable of being enforced where the religious obligation has lost its weight. Marriage is a social as well as a Divine institutions are mixed up with it; questions of property, of maintenance, of the custody of children, which are all more or less affected by the unexpected decision of the Appeal Court. The offence of desertion is practically abolished by it; for the husband will undoubtedly claim the same liberty as the wife; and then let us conaider for a moment what marriage will really be reduced to. If the wife has independent means, she can suap her fingers at her husband. If not, then if she chooses to leave him without any valid cause, it is contrary to justice that she should be able to compel him to support her. She is nothing to him. She forswears his society, and comports herself in every respect except one, as if she had never known him. If he continues to give her money, what is it for ? Certainly not what he contracted for when the marriage took place. If it should come to be recognized that a husband in this position ought not to be compelled to maintain a woman merely because she bears his name. the next step would be to declare that a woman in that p sition had a right to a dissolution of marriage, and to unite herself to some other man with whom she thought she could endure to live. Thus, incompatibility of temper would become a sufficient ground for divorce u vinoulo matrimonii. Marringo would lose all its senctity. The reciprocal duties which husband and wife owe to each other, all the sacred pledges and solumn responsibilities to which they now commit securities which still exercise any influence over the minds of the people. The Law Journal says :- We are glad to action is directed by a superior intelligence

FRANCE AND GERMANY, OR 1806 VERSUS 187...71. (Colonel G. B. Mallenon, in the United Service Magazine.) Amid the discussions which, since

1870-71, have ranged all over Europe, one

cided, he said, by the Lord Chancellor Villeroi were almost always victorious when lesson. In 18'9. Berthier gave proof poleon led to victory would not un der his own direction, have combate successfully against the Austrian Archiduke. We have seen, in our own day, the same principle asserting itself in the civil war in America. It is generally admitted that the turning-point in that war was the death of Stonewall Jackson. But for the untimely death of that during warrior. Les would have triumphed at Gettysburg, and Washington must, as a consequence, have fallen. In all great campaigns it has been the individual man, for more than the mass of men, who has mainly contributed to the a recessful result. Who, of all the men then living in the world, who but Napoleon Bonaparte, could have directed that marrellous compaign of 1796. Of late years this truth has been lost sight of. The merits of the Garman demerits of the French, commanders have been put saide as less germane to the issue the excellence of the race, and the superiority of drill. The question has been made in fact, a question of race. The Teuton, it has been loudly insisted, will always bust the Gaul. The question of generalship has been cast into the background. It has even been gravely urged, in my presence, that not Napoleon himself, were he to reappear in all the plenitude of his genius and his activity, could lead French troops to victory over the Germans I dispute these conclusions. I declare that every page of history proves them to be false. I am confident that the individuality of man is. in this year of grace, as potent a factor on the battle-field as it ever has been in the history of the human race; that in the present, as in the past, where the numbers on both sides shall at all approach equality, the victory will be due, not to race but to the general. I do not believe that the Tauton is a better soldier than the Gaul. He never was so in the past, and the events of 1870-71, critically examined do not show that any change has taken place in their relative merits. I shall prove this in a few words, and in those words I shall make it clear to the reader why I have chosen the compaign of 1800 to illustrate my argument

There have been two tremendous duellos between France and North Germany-the duello of 1800, and the duello of 1870-71. They were fought under exactly opposite conditions. In 1806 France possessed the general, and she won : in 1870-71 the advantages of leadership were with North Germany, and the victory fell to her. The Germans who were defeated in 1806 were to all intents and purposes the same men who had followed Frederick II. to many a victory. They proved their kinchip to those hardy warriors in 1813. Their drill. their discipline, their organisation, had since the Seven Years War, been the boast of Europe. Sir William Napier, who wrote with some authority of the period, describes, in the appendices to his history of the Peninsular War, the extent to which English opinion was infatuated about the Prussian Army. It cannot be said, then, men. But in 1806 there men were beaten-shamefully, disgrecefully beatonin time to present itself in the light only of simply because they were led by inferior a provisional arrangement, not exactly generals. In 1870-71 the conditions were reversed. Then it was Germany which had the good generals-France which was destitute of a leader. A result see many more reckless marriages, and precisely analogous followed. Leadership. represented by Germany, gained the day. The result of the two duellos proved, not that the Teuton is superior as a fighting man to the Gaul, but rather that; in way. it is the individual that is all-powerful ; the individual who, under Providence, shapes the outres of events. The best soldiers in the world are, after all, machines whose
